

The Princess And The Peasant

By Camelia Baker

The princess in the castle sought love far and wide
But nothing was found, and so she cried
She traveled down to town looking for something to do
And met a peasant girl there, with bright eyes, sea-blue

The princess in the castle sought love far and wide
But she'd finally met someone who made her sigh
The girl's name was Serena, after the calm ocean
And the princess's plan was already in motion

The princess in the castle sought love far and wide
And finally, at last, she'd found her bride
Sweet and fair, with golden blonde hair
With such beauty that it made the princess stare

The princess in the castle sought love far and wide
She dreamt of the wedding, arriving on a carriage ride
But her parents disapproved, and angry they were
When they found out their daughter was in love with a peasant girl.
